

Vijayamba R

Vijayamba is a development economist interested in studying women's work in the labour markets. Her research interests include time use, decision-making, social norms, and issues of measurement. Currently, she teaches at the National Law School of India University, Bengaluru. She explored measurement issues of women's work using secondary data for her post-doctoral fellowship at NCAER-NDIC and is adept at working with primary survey methods, including time-use surveys, questionnaires, and focus group discussions. Her recent work addresses the challenge of estimating women workers in livestock raising.
